Naturegraph published the Story of Linda Lookout by Keith Hoofnagle fifty years ago. In lieu of the annual devastating summer forest fires, we enlarged the story when fire lookouts helped protect our nations forests before most were replaced by airplanes. This history of lookouts through cartoons, humor, and information gives knowledge of what living high on an isolated mountain top 24-7 in a lookout, including the terrifying thunder and lightning storms, was like and fires spotted and reported. The fire location lingo was a set of basic codes, brief and to the point sent by radio. By never leaving their post, supplies were usually packed up by mules.
