The Seven Elements for A Healthy Landscape James S. Cody

The Seven Elements for a Healthy Landscape is a fundamental approach to viewing the landscape as an interconnected whole. Each element is important, but their interdependent nature gives immense and infinite results. The individual is vital to understanding and implementing the process. The development of local landscape design and care will provide a step towards collective stewardship on a global scale. It is a method to improve our understanding of and reconnecting to ourselves and our natural surroundings. And as we reconnect it may provide solutions to some of the world's most troubling dilemmas.
