Intranets Vs. Lotus Notes Joseph T. Sinclair, David G. Hale

This text is intended for people who are looking for options beyond NetWare or NT networks, and who want the functionality of Lotus Notes without the training, maintenance and management usually associated with it. It explains how to build an Intranet, discusses the software needed, and how to use your Intranet locally to connect to a WAN. The comparisons to Lotus Notes provide a frame of reference. The book provides instruction on how to build a groupware system with a variety TCP/IP programs accessible via the Internet, and provides details on how to use the appropriate Internet programs for groupwork purposes.
