A year ago Des Wadman was just a blameless Goth chancer working as the Chief Letter-Opener in the Post Room of a dull-witted corporation. Now he is a clown soldier flying back from his first mission. His mind wanders back into the past, back to Zoodlespratt's School of Clowning, where his covert militarisation began.

Once assigned the character of posh hobo clown, Manley Buggering-Tofftoff, his troupe's first mission is to perform an "ordinary rendition" of a 'militant clown' deep in Jalalaland. After dropping a 600lb custard pie on the small village of Tangi, they roll in as a small travelling circus and attempt to extract their target, but are themselves attacked by guerrilla clowns (dressed as gorillas, because nobody expects the expected any more).

Held captive at a McAirBase, they are interrogated by a mysterious man dressed as Ronald McDonald. A young girl from Tangi helps them escape in exchange for clown make-up. But what is this 'dragon' she says is terrorising her village? And why is the ragged ghost of Joseph Grimaldi stalking him? Such knowledge will exact a terrible cost, the price all soldiers must pay in that ceaselessly travelling circus called war.

A host of eccentric characters, including a clown pimp called Mentacle and a mime called Claptrap, ensure that a lot of satirical custard gets spilled in this madcap adventure for our times.
